BERLIN, September 11.—The Fuehrer's Headquarters announced in a war communique today that the German forces had occupied Trino and Milan in Northern Italy.

In another announcement, the German military authorities stated that Communist uprisings occurred in these cities but the Germans in cooperation with the Italian garrison succeeded in suppressing them.

At noon today the same authorities stated:

"Already more than 200,000 Italian officers and men have surrendered to the Reich Army and these do not include the officers and men of the Roman and Milanese garrisons who have also surrendered. They are all expressing their willingness to cooperate with us and continue fighting the Anglo-American forces. We are satisfied with the progress being made in the military situation in Italy, the disarming of Italian officers and men and strong measures to prevent Italian forces from offering resistance to us."

In a press conference with foreign correspondents the military authorities remarked:

"The greater part of the Italian Peninsula and seaboard has fallen into German hands."

In regard to the activities of German Navy, the same authorities issued the following communique:

"(1) The German coastal defense unit on the night of September 10 engaged a British torpedo-boat squadron in Saint Valery waters in the English Channel and sank a torpedo boat and set another on fire.

"(2) Another unit of the coastal defense force engaged another British torpedo-boat squadron off Peter Port and sank a torpedo-boat and scored numerous hits on others. In both engagements the Germans suffered no damage.

"(3) A patrol squadron protecting a German convoy encountered an anti-Axis torpedo-boat squadron off Norway at midnight today and repelled it after inflicting severe damage on it."

Independence Commission for P.I. Consummates Momentous Task

Drafting of Constitution Forms Important Landmark —Organic Law of State Unanimously Approved by Special Assembly

By JORGE TEODORO

Domei

MANILA, September 11.—The unanimous ratification of the Philippine Constitution by delegates of the special general assembly marked a successful culmination of the work undertaken by the Independence Preparatory Commission of the Philippines headed by Jose Laurel which drafted the document.

Behind 27 pages of printed matter embodying the Constitution lay a series of swift dazzling events starting with the outbreak of the War of Greater East Asia, the collapse of the United States sovereignty over the Islands, the emergence of the Philippines within the new order of Greater East Asia and thrice-repeated pledge by Prime Minister General Hideki Tojo to grant independence to the Philippines within the current year.

The first step towards the drafting of the Constitution was taken shortly after Prime Minister Tojo's third avowal to grant freedom when the Kalibapi met in a special national convention and approved the appointment of a five-man committee and nominated 20 members to the Preparatory Commission.

While the creation of the Commission was in progress, Jose P. Laurel, Commissioner of the Interior, who was subsequently made president of the Preparatory Commission was rapidly recuperating at the Philippine General Hospital from wounds inflicted on June 5 by a treacherous assailant.

The formation of the Commission proceeded earnestly. On June 20, Jose Laurel was chosen president; former Chief Justice of the Supreme Court Ramon Avancena, first vice-president; director-general of the Kalibapi Benignos Aquino, second vice-president.

Presided over by Ramon Avancena, the first meeting was held on June 23 at which the matter of organization was further discussed and Judge Proceso Sebastain was appointed executive secretary of the Commission.

Jose Laurel issued his first statement on June 29 in which he expressed his gratitude for being selected as president of the Preparatory Commission. He also voiced his hope that "with disinterested help of his co-workers and the encouragement of the liberty-loving countrymen, we will succeed in evolving a plan of government for the new Philippines that will meet the problems confronting the new nation as an integral unit of the Greater East Asia Co-Prosperity Sphere. "Mr. Laurel convened the first session of the Commission in his sick room on July 5, and divided the group into six committees for the special study of various sections of the proposed Constitution.

Prime Minister Tojo's second visit to Manila on July 11 gave added impetus to the work of the Preparatory Commission which met in an extraordinary session at Manila Hotel in the presence of the distinguished visitor. The Conference was marked by the mutual exchange of views between the Prime Minister and members of the body, with the former giving encouragement to the Filipino leaders.

Having completely recovered from his injury, Mr. Laurel left the hospital for his residence on July 21. He reaffirmed the Filipino people's resolute will in the work for the establishment of an independent government and to seek the destiny within the comity of the Greater East Asiatic nations.

Meanwhile history marched onward for on August 1, the momentous declaration of the independence of the sister nation, Burma, was flashed to the world. Drawing new inspiration from this historic event, both Mr. Laurel and Jorge Vargas chairman of the Philippine Executive Commission issued statements congratulating the new-born sovereign government, declaring that it is tangible evidence of the striking manifestation of Japan's sacred war objective to liberate the East Asiatic nations from foreign yoke.

This time, too, the news reached the Philippines Convention of the formation of the Indian National Army under dynamic leadership of Subhas Chandra Bose for the redemption of the Indian people from British rule, further heightening the preparations for independence in the Philippines.

Mr. Laurel held his first press interview at his residence on August 5 at which he stressed the ideals of the new Philippines. He said: "My concept of the foundation spirit of the new Philippines is three-fold, namely, love of country, co-existence and co-prosperity, and adherence to the moral ethical principles within the country as well as without."

Meanwhile, the various committees formed on July 5 having completed their work, submitted their recommendations to the plenary session of the Commission on August 7 as the Commission entered the last phase of the preliminary discussions. Despite pressing duties, Mr. Laurel took time out on August 9 to make a round of thanksgiving calls to express his gratitude to Japanese officials for his complete recovery. He said that "I feel as if I were born again. Guided by this sentiment, I will devote my life to the cause of the construction of the new Philippines."

In his capacity as chairman of the drafting committee, Mr. Laurel submitted the final draft to the second plenary session of the Commission on August 20 from which date discussions continued daily until September 3 when the Commission, in its

Japan's Position Sound, Says P.I. Paper

MANILA, September 11.—Referring to the surrender of the Badoglio Government to the anti-Axis, the Tribune declared today that "Politically and strategically Japan's position in Greater East Asia has not been affected by recent European developments."

The paper also pointed out, "Emancipated Asiatic peoples are now marching onward with unity and purpose, and their spirit cannot be dampened by the changes in Europe. Japan's armed forces are standing as firm as, invulnerable bastions for the defense of Asia, ready to counter any enemy movements."

Declaring that what was expected has merely come to pass, the Tribune stressed that both Japan and Germany had prepared for every exigency in close liaison and that they are now more determined than ever to fight until the Anglo-American Powers are completely annihilated.

"As for the Philippines," the paper asserted, "All we need to do is to concentrate on the task at hand of building up New Philippines which will realize independence in the very near future."

COOPERATIVE SPIRIT STRESSED BY PHIBUN

Says Italy's Collapse Due to Lack of United Efforts Among People

Domei

BANGKOK, September 12.—The present [illegible] due to the lack of cooperation among its people," declared Premier Field-Marshal Phibun Songkhram of Thailand over the radio on Sunday evening. He also stressed the necessity of further tightening the spirit of cooperation among the people of Thailand.

Premier Songkhram declared:

"The term 'unconditional surrender' was used for the first time in the current war when the enemy surrendered to Japan at Singapore, Hongkong, the Philippines, and other places. Italy has capitulated to the anti-Axis Powers. I feel the greatest regret for the disastrous fate which befell the Italians. However, I must admit the fact that the downfall of the Italian nation is due to the lack of cooperation within the country. Because of that, Italy has been transformed into an arena of devastating hostilities with the Germans fighting desperately against the American and British forces, the Germans against the Italians, and the Italians against each other.

"Thailand must further forge its national structure through the wholehearted cooperation among its people in order to conquer every obstacle and hardship and also to frustrate the enemy's designs."

LANDING AT TARANTO CONFIRMED BY REICH

Enemy Also Active in Western Puglia

Domei

BERLIN, September 11.—The anti-Axis forces have landed at Taranto and the western part of Puglia, formerly known as Apulia, German authorities confirmed today.

Puglia forms the heel of the Italian boot, and if the entire district should fall into the hands of the anti-Axis forces, it would become a strategic foothold for an advance into the Balkans.

Although anti-Axis forces have confirmedly landed at the western part of Puglia, it has not been ascertained whether the operation was undertaken by the United States Seventh Army that was awaiting action in Sicily, or by the British forces.

Soviets Attempt Landing at Novorossisk Area—Germans Counter-Attack

PADUA, POLA OCCUPIED

Luftwaffe Furiously Bombs Naval Establishments at Salerno Bay

Domei

BERLIN, September 11.—The German Army yesterday wrecked 203 Soviets tanks on the Eastern Front, it was stated in the communique issued by the Fuehrer's Headquarters at noon today.

The communique said:

"Eastern Front

"(1) Red Army troops attempted a landing in the Novorossisk area but before they could reach the shore the German battery wrought havoc in their midst and the greater part of the attacking force was destroyed. The battle with the remnants is now at its height. The German land and sea forces sank or set on fire one Soviet gunboat, one patrol boat and 11 landing barges.

"(2) The German-Rumanian forces withdrew from Mariupol, an important port on the Sea of Azov, according to a pre-arranged plan after completely destroying all the strategic facilities there. Subsequently they annihilated to a man the Red Army force which had landed on the shore of the Sea of Azov to the southwest of Mariupol.

"(3) A German tank unit surrounded a division of Soviet sharpshooters at a point west of Krasnoarmejskoe and destroyed its operations section.

"(4) In the Kharkov area and the area southwest of Konotop, the Red Army sent out strong units to attack the German positions but the Germans beat them back after severe fighting and by closing in the breach made by the attackers prevented the Soviets from renewing the assault.

"(5) On the Central Front to the south and southwest of Kirov a terrific defense warfare is continuing, while the persistent attacks of the Soviets west of Vyazma were repelled. The Soviets who thrust into the foremost outpost of the Germans were driven back by the counter-attacking Germans.

"(6) The Reich Army on September 10 wrecked 203 Soviet tanks.

"Italian Front.

"(1) The disarming of the Italians under Badoglio is expected to be completed soon. The Germans are acting promptly and effectively wherever resistance still exists.

"(2) The Italian forces occupying Rhodes Island surrendered following an attack by German dive bombers.

"(3) The Italian Royal Guards that had been stationed around Rome with a strength of two tank divisions and five infantry divisions laid down their arms and surrendered as soon as the Germans began firm action against them.

"(4) The Germans occupied Milan, Trino and Padua in Northern Italy and the naval fortress at Pola also surrendered.

"(5) In the Salerno area the Germans engaged a powerful anti-Axis force. The coastal lowland and the highland to the east were captured by the Germans and the anti-Axis force has suffered severe damage.

"(6) A German air force furiously bombed the naval establishments and the landed enemy force at Salerno Bay and sank several transports and landing barges and inflicted heavy damage on other vessels.

"Western Front.

"Several anti-Axis planes appeared over the coast of Western Europe on September 10. The German ground battery brought down one of them."

Newest Italian Battleship, Roma, Sunk in Reich Attack

35,000-Ton Capital Ship, on Way to Malta, Caught By German Aircraft—Was Completed Soon After European War Broke Out

Domei

LISBON, September 11.—The Italian battleship Roma, 35,000 tons, was sunk by German aircraft on September 9 while attempting to steal to Malta Island, it was announced by the Anti-Axis Army Headquarters in North Africa today, according to a report received here from Algiers.

The keel for the Roma was laid down on September 13, 1938 and was completed only after the outbreak of the European War, so that it was the newest battleship in the Italian Navy. It had nine 12-inch guns for its main armament and 15 six-inch guns for supplementary armament. It was also equipped with 12 3.5-inch high-angle guns, three aircraft and carried a crew of 1,600.

Sinking Described

Domei

BERLIN, September 11.—A German bomber force attacked the Italian fleet that was fleeing from Italy at a point between the islands of Corsica and Sardinia on September 9, and sank for certain one battleship.

The anti-Axis camp admitted the fact that this battleship was the newest capital ship of the Italian fleet, the Roma. British information gives an eye-witness account of the sinking by the pilot of a British plane that was in the vicinity.

"A tremendous explosion hit the Italian battleship and then a column of thick, black smoke, some 3,000-4,000 feet high, rose up in the air. The stern submerged and the bow went straight up into the air. The hull then split into two and both instantly went down."

CORRUPTION IS RIFE IN CHUNGKING AREAS

Currency Is Issued Recklessly; Officials Out For Personal Gain

Domei

NANKING, September 10.—Exorbitant price scheming of military cliques and the corruption of military and civil officials are making life unbearable in Chungking controlled districts, revealed a Chinese merchant who recently entered the pacified area.

"In Chungking controlled districts paper currency is issued recklessly without backing, and in July circulation exceeded over 50,000,000,000 yuan," he declared, adding that "one hundred yuan bills flooded not only cities but also agrarian communities."

"A one yuan bill today is only worth the value of the paper that it is printed on," he said, "and one pical of rice costs 4,000 yuan. As a result, the people are clamoring for peace.

"There is an obvious disunity between Chiang Kai-shek and the Szechwan military clique. In fact Chiang Kai-shek has authority only over district in the immediate vicinity of Chungking.

"No civil official of the military authority of the Kuomintang is without a subsidiary occupation. Taking advantage of their official positions they openly conduct illegal transactions for personal gain.

"If businessmen bound by unfair control complain, they are threatened by the officials.

"Therefore," the merchant concluded, "I left Chungking territory for the pacified zone where I can live in peace."

DECISIVE CAMPAIGN IN NORTH ITALY SEEN

German Forces Under Rommel Ready for Clash With Anglo-U.S. Troops

Domei

BERLIN, September 11.—With the northern part of Italy in German hands a decisive campaign is expected in the mid-northern plains of the peninsula.

Owing to the treachery of the Badoglio Government Italy is now subject to attack both from the Germans and Anglo-American forces. Badoglio seems to have fled to Sicily and is serving the Americans and British at Eisenhower's headquarters at Palermo. Part of the Italians that were in Southern Italy joined forces with the Anglo-American forces that landed there and the greater part of the land forces disarmed themselves or surrendered. Almost all the seaboard north of Central Italy has fallen into the hands of the Germans.

The Hube Army which had been resisting the advance of the British 8th Army after evacuating from Sicily was in a difficult position for the time being owing to the Badoglio treachery but on the night of September 8 it began skilfully to withdraw and although in a small strength of a few divisions it launched a terrific counter-attack on the Anglo-American forces that landed on Salerno Bay, pressing the enemy into a narrow strip of land on the seashore.

Part of the Kesselring Expeditionary Army to Southern Italy that lay in the Rome area advanced southward and established contact with Naples in preparations against the possible landing of the Anglo-American forces. The powerful German Expeditionary Army to Northern Italy commanded by Field Marshal Erwin Rommel has occupied important points north of the Apennines and set up an unshakable iron defense.

The Trieste Peninsula, Trino and Milan have already been placed under German control and Germans are being stationed at other important points. The country north of Naples has been completely occupied by the Reich forces. The military authorities at Berlin have announced that the military operations against Italy have ended.

Field Marshal Rommel had for a time been commanding the forces in the Balkans but he was placed in command in Northern Italy so that his two-year experience of fighting the Anglo-American forces in North Africa may be availed of. The German press is giving prominence to the expectations of the people that there will be something to see under the able command of Field Marshal Rommel.

Having lost all will to fight and plunged into a state of despairing apathy, the Italian people have

AN X X BASE IN THE SOUTH PACIFIC, September 11.—Heavy damage was inflicted on an enemy force of 500 that came attacking the Japanese garrison on Arundell Island south of Kulambangra on September 7.

The Japanese on Arundell are engaged in a fierce combat simultaneously with the terrific fighting raging on New Georgia, striking terror into the enemy.

On September 7 an enemy unit numbering 500 launched an attack on the Japanese garrison there and in the engagement the enemy left 30 dead on the field, automatic rifles, revolvers and large quantities of ammunition. The same day a Japanese scouting unit stole into the enemy lines and by a surprise attack wiped out the officer-scouts of the enemy.

On September 9 another enemy force of 500 came attacking but by a terrific counter-attack beat them back the same afternoon.

It is seen that in the face of the growing strength of the Japanese, enemy activities are steadily slowing down.

Domei

AN X X BASE IN THE SOUTH PACIFIC, September 11.—Japanese airmen continued their attacks on the enemy landing place at Hopoi, New Guinea, causing severe damage to men and supplies.

Accompanying the intensifying conflict on land in the New Guinea area, the struggle for air power has taken on added grimness.

A Japanese air unit carried out a surprise attack near the spot where the enemy landed at Hopoi at about 6:40 a.m. on September 5 and inflicted much damage to the men and supplies gathered there. The next day Japanese planes carried out another attack at 8:30 a.m. and engaged enemy planes over the same spot. Among the damage caused to the enemy, a Republic Lancer P-43 was shot down. On September 7 a night raid was made on the same place and in spite of the enemy fire net demolished the living quarters of the landed troops.

The attack was continued at 8:10 the following morning and the enemy troops in tents were completely trapped by a net of machine-gun fire that was cast by the planes. A P-38 came up in panic and it was promptly shot down. At 5:30 the same afternoon the attack was resumed and by machine-gun fire and bombs the barracks and tents of the enemy were set on fire. Another raid was conducted on the tent colony and heavy damage inflicted.

JAVA WILL BOLSTER FEMININE ACTIVITIES

New Women's Associations Set To Absorb Existing Organizations

Domei

DJAKARTA, September 9.—The Japanese Military Administration has decided on the formal establishment of Women's Associations in every prefecture and city throughout Java to absorb the existing women's associations which have been steadily springing up in various parts of the island in the wake of the creation of youth corps and defense corps here.

The new associations will coordinate feminine activities hitherto carried on separately and the administration's decision has been conveyed to regional authorities. The aims of these new bodies will be the strengthening of women's cooperation with the administration as well as to render various public services. They will include all native women over 15 years of age.

Existing women's associations will be incorporated into the new organs. Prefectural governors and mayors will serve as honorary presidents while the presidents of the associations will be chosen from among the native women participants.

Promotion of defense and relief activities will be carried on through lectures and actual participation by the women's associations, which, at the same time, will work to improve the living conditions of the Javanese behind the guns, encourage savings and promote public welfare through health and sanitation activities.

In close cooperation with the Java school system, the associations will also be concerned with the education of children outside of the regular schooling as well as home education.

ALL ITALIANS TOLD TO SURRENDER ARMS

Agreement With Reich Announced

Burma Is Resolved to Redouble War Efforts in Unity With Japan

Badoglio's Surrender Does Not Affect War Situation, Ba Maw Assures Nation Over Radio; Reiterates Loyalty to Nippon and Faith in Final Victory

Domei

RANGOON, September 12.—"The Government of Burma will not be influenced in the least by the treacherous surrender of the Badoglio government of Italy, but will redouble its determination to fight on to final victory in cooperation with Japan and the other Axis nations," declared Dr. Ba Maw, Head of State and Prime Minister of Burma. This statement was issued on behalf of his countrymen after a deliberate discussion on the Italian situation, at the extraordinary cabinet meeting held Saturday.

The statement in full, follows:

"The unconditional surrender of the Badoglio government will effect no change in the general situation of the present World War. The Burmese, in full realization of Japan's efforts which enabled us to achieve glorious independence, are determined to remain ever more loyal to Japan and to fight on to victory in order to bring about a New Order, in close collaboration with Japan and the other Axis nations.

"Every pledge taken by the Government must be fully translated into action. At the present juncture, the Burmese, who are fully conscious of the world situation, will further tighten the ties binding them with other Asiatic peoples.

"Our pledge and war objective are absolute and sacred no matter what may be in store for us in the future. Our fighting spirit must be bolstered and war materials must be increased in view of the fact that both are indispensable for the successful prosecution of the war. We have an unswerving faith in final victory and in the downfall of our enemy.

"We are fighting for our own existence and for the existence of all Asiatics with the ultimate objective of establishing a New Order not only in East Asia, but also in the whole world. Victory, and victory only will secure our existence. Therefore, we must offer our loyalty and service to Japan and tender every possible cooperation to attain the common aim of realizing the true war objectives."

FUKIEN HEAD BLASTS CHIANG FOR NEGLECT

Many Thousands Die Due to Plagues

CANTON, September 10.—Liu Chien-su, Governor of Fukien Province, severly criticized the Chungking authorities for neglecting to give any aid to the stricken province in a press interview with the Ta Kung Pao at Shiukwan, Kwantung Province, August 28, according to information reaching here.

Liu, who is on his way to Chungking, stated that deaths from uncontrollable plagues in Fukien have already reached several thousands, and added that although a new three-year building plan was set up, not even one-third of the plan has been realized due to the impoverishment of the people.

"Chungking authorities are now concentrating everything on the northwestern districts and are ignoring the reconstruction of Fukien Province which is easier to accomplish and more urgent," Liu continued. "Furthermore, the construction of Fukien Province will require only one-fifth of the manpower used in the northwestern districts."

HOPE FOR 2ND FRONT GIVEN UP BY SOVIETS

Moscow Pushing Forward Furious Offensive

Domei

STOCKHOLM, September 11.—To all intents and purposes the Soviets have already abandoned the idea of relying on a Second Front to save the day for them and are now battling with desperate frenzy on the Eastern Front in an endeavor to reach the eastern bank of the Dnieper River before the commencement of a winter offensive.

The Red Army has been waging a war of attribution under terrific punishment and with the muddy fall season ahead it is working with fretful impatience.

Harold King, Moscow correspondent of the Reuter News Agency, today commented on the war situation as follows:

"The Red Army seems to have decided to continue its offensive regardless of whether a Second Front will be formed or not. The rainy autumn may somewhat hamper the operations of the Russians but it is not likely to stop their offensive. At any rate, the situation is now such that the Red Army would welcome aid from the anti-Axis forces but are not counting much on it."

HOME OFFICE APPROVES BUDGET OF METROPOLIS

Appropriations for Defense Bureau, Police Board, Economic Bureau Set

The Tokyo Metropolis Friday obtained the approval of the Home Ministry for appropriating ¥36,140,828 as supplementary budget in addition to the ¥397,578,101 provisional budget for the months of July, August, September and October until the organization of the Metropolitan Assembly which will vote on the metropolitan budget.

The general account of the supplementary budget amounts to ¥30,408,340 and the special account ¥5,732,488. The principal items are the appropriations for the Defense Bureau ¥19,446,558. Metropolitan Police Board ¥1,113,200, Economic Bureau ¥185,794 and Planning Bureau ¥539,000. The Defense Bureau is to spend the sum for constructing simple reservoirs, fire-fighting wells, natural water facilities, public air-raid shelters and the like.

shown no resistance either way and peace and order is being maintained without trouble under the Germans but at Trino and Milan a Communist Executive Committee had been formed, which took advantage of the general confusion to stage demonstrations, so that there was more or less rioting. The Germans in cooperation with the Italian garrisons quelled the disturbance. The authorities are expected to make this the occasion for conducting a nation-wide suppression of Communist influence.

The Germans have also released all the influential Fascists who had been imprisoned by the Badoglio Government and are supporting them to form a new administrative system.

Thus the Germans are expected to engage the Anglo-American forces that are advancing northward in the mid-northern part of the country in a decisive campaign.

KUOMINTANG SLATED FOR LOSS OF POWER

Chiang Forced to Consider Founding of Constitutional Administration

Domei

CANTON, September 12.—Confronted with ever-increasing disorder in the Chungking regime, Chiang Kai-shek has brought forth the long-pending issue of founding a constitutional administrative structure, thus contradicting his previous policy of according preference to the Kuomintang. This move attests to the seriousness of the situation Chiang now finds himself in with entrance of the current war into a decisive stage.

For the purpose of mitigating public opinion which is unfavorable to the Chungking regime, the 11th preliminary session of the Central Executive and Supervisory Committees of the Kuomintang was convened at Chungking. At the opening ceremony on September 6 Chiang urged the attendants to extend their wholehearted cooperation to the regime after having explained the purpose of the conference and future policies.

He elucidated his policy regarding the establishment of political as well as economic foundations and further expounded the urgency of installing a constitutional administrative form of government.

The importance of founding the nation on the basis of a constitutional administration was first stressed by the late Dr. Sun Yat-sen, Founder of the Chinese Republic, but hitherto Chiang schemed to strengthen the influence of the Kuomintang and subsequently his own dictatorial power, regardless of the ideal of the greater founder. At the last session of the Central Executive and Supervisory Committees of the Kuomintang, Chiang obviously maneuvered to extend the administrative power of the Kuomintang into local districts by improving and strengthening local administrative organs.

Why is it then that Chiang has assumed an attitude to check the further increase of the Kuomintang's influence? Evidently he aims to cajole and woo the masses, whose antagonism and distrust against the Chungking regime had been aggravated with the postponement of the long-promised convening of the national conference ever since 1937, due to the outbreak of the China Affairs.

However, with the intensification of internal controversies and confusion, Chiang was forced to play his trump card by presenting the problem of establishing a constitutional form of government.

BUENOS AIRES, September 11.—The Chilean Government has decided to recall their diplomatic staff in Copenhagen today, reports a dispatch from Santiago.

U.S. Senator Admits War in Pacific Zone Is Tough, Dangerous

Domei

LISBON, September 10.—"War in the Pacific is tough and dangerous," asserted Senator Albert Chandler who is at present visiting American war fronts in the Southwestern Pacific as a member of a committee of five, according to reports received here. The Democrat from Kentucky continued, "We have greatly underestimated the Japanese in every way—in fighting ability and production capacity."

ENEMY MUST SEND SUPPLIES TO ITALY

Need for British Coal Vital For Continuation of Anti-Axis Operations

Domei

LISBON, September 11.—With the capitulation of the Badoglio regime to the United States and Britain, the anti-Axis Powers have been thrown into a dilemma inasmuch as they must supply vital material to Italy.

British Fuel Minister Major Lloyd George made the following comment today with regard to the apparent difficult of supplying Italy with coal, according to London dispatches:

"Germany hitherto supplied 1,000,000 tons of coal monthly to Italy, but Britain has no such surplus to spare. Consequently Britain will be able to send only the minimum supply of coal to meet the demands of the railway facilities and munitions factories in Italy, the operation of which is indispensable for the continuance of operations by the anti-Axis forces there."

The Daily Express in Britain, therefore, commented that the Italian people would have to do without coal this coming winter.

EISENHOWER AS CANDIDATE

Backed by G.O.P. Senator to Run in Next Presidential Election

Domei

BUENOS AIRES, September 10.—The hero-worship of the American people is a queer thing. Movements are under way to elect heroes of the current war in the presidential election next year.

General Douglas A. MacArthur, Commander-in-Chief of the Anti-Axis Forces in the Southwestern Pacific, was put forward as a presidential candidate by a group of Americans some time ago. It now is the turn of General Dwight D. Eisenhower, Commander-in-Chief of the Anti-Axis Forces in the Mediterranean area, to be supported by another group as a candidate in the coming election.

Senator Arthur Capper, Republican of Kansas told the press today that he wanted to see Eisenhower running in the coming presidential race.

ANGLO-U.S. PEOPLE IRED AT MACARTHUR

Slow Progress Made in Southwestern Pacific Irritates Public

Domei

STOCKHOLM, September 10.—The military correspondent of the Swedish paper Dagens Nyheter stated that there is a growing irritation in the United States and Britain at the slowness of General Douglas MacArthur's offensive in the Southwestern Pacific battle area, although both Roosevelt and Churchill, after the recent Quebec Conference, promised "calmness would soon end for Japan."

The correspondent writes to the effect that Japan's efforts in entering into firmer relations with the occupied areas is being intensified as time passes. He further explained that a sign of this is the slowness of MacArthur's offensive advances.

The Dagens Nyheter also declared that because time is on Japan's side, the Quebec Conference decided on intensifying the war against Japan. The correspondent attributes another reason to Chungking's difficult position, explaining that it is being reflected in a recent editorial appearing in the New York Times, which urges the United States and Britain to get working on the Chungking problem, and that it cannot be postponed any longer.

He said that this sign of irritation is also seen in an article in a recent issue of the London Economist. From the slowness and the costliness of the fighting in the New Guinea and New Georgia areas, it can be argued that the latest Pacific offensive like its predecessors, proves "slow and costly, and island-hopping is not an ideal method of counter-attacks."

The Rejuvenation of Shanghai

Masayuki Tani, the Japanese Ambassador to China, declared in a press interview in Shanghai last week: "The new municipal administration of Shanghai is progressing favorably under the leadership of Mayor Chen Kung-po and other leaders, while the recently enforced measure of compulsory purchase of cotton yarn and piece-goods has so far proved highly successful, thanks to cooperation offered by Japanese military, official and civilian circles and the Commercial Control Association." It is, indeed, gratifying to learn that Shanghai is achieving definite success in its endeavors for political and economic rejuvenation.

It is recalled that on July 24 the Japanese Economic Goodwill Mission to China headed by Masatsune Ogura made public a report crediting the financial circles of China with the determination (1) to bring about a speedy solution of current economic problems in China with Japanese assistance and thereby expedite China's economic contribution to Japan, (2) to effect thoroughgoing measures, economic and legal, to deal with the question of commodity hoarding, the cancer of Central China's economy, (3) to stabilize prices and to raise the value of currency, and (4) to promote economic interchange with the South. In other words, the financial circles of China were fully alive to the need for the exercise of Government authority and the enforcement of unified, realistic measures in the interests of a wholesome economic development in Central China.

Every one knows that the greatest impediment to economic progress in Central China has been the cornering and hoarding of commodities in Shanghai. It is this evil practice which has disturbed the stability of the price situation and engendered continuous economic chaos. As a rule, price rise comes from commodity dearth and currency inflation. In China, there has been the additional—and very formidable—factor of hoarding, which has persisted for a long time and forced up prices to an abnormal level.

Long a base of Anglo-American aggression against China, Shanghai inevitably came under the influence of Anglo-American capitalism, which gave birth to corrupt brokers, bureaucrats and financiers who continued to batten on ever-swelling Anglo-American capital. Then, too, the foreign concessions were poisoned by Anglo-American ideologies. Such was the background of the moral and economic degeneration into which the Yangtze port city had fallen.

The reflex of this degeneration was the rampancy of anti-Government and anti-control ideas which put personal interests above anything else. Such a state of affairs was, naturally, liable to offer a chance for enemy propaganda. It will be recalled that, following the inauguration of Japan's new China policy, which included the rendition of concessions, the relinquishment of extraterritorial rights, the transfer of enemy property to the Nanking Government, and other similar measures, something of an economic commotion was created in Central China. This coincidence was exploited for enemy propaganda, which alleged that the economic commotion was the consequence of Japan's new policy. To any one at all conversant with conditions in Central China, the falsity of such propaganda was more than obvious. It was nothing but the last paltry resistance of the last vestiges of the former Anglo-American capitalistic influence, which was doomed to extinction with the carrying out of Japan's new policy.

The Nanking Government, in cooperation with Japan, was quick to control the situation and blast the transparent infestation of the enemy's propaganda agents. At a conference of the Supreme Defense Council held on August 9, the Nanking Government decided on regulations governing the compulsory purchase of cotton yarn and cotton piece-goods as the first step toward setting up economic stability. Incidentally, this was the right step in the right direction, in that the market trend of cotton yarn and piece-goods was the typical illustration of the analogous price situation in Central China.

In the meantime, the leaders of China would do well to remember that Shanghai's rejuvenation will not be achievable through economic reforms alone. Administrative measures must be taken side by side with economic activities. An onerous task, therefore, devolves upon Mayor Cheng and those who shoulder the responsibility of the administration of Shanghai. It is sincerely to be hoped that the Nanking leaders will go about the task before them with determination and fervor, bearing in mind that the rejuvenation of Shanghai will be but the touchstone of their political ability.

Payment by 'Other Means'

In a press interview last Tuesday, President Roosevelt reiterated once again that Britain, the Soviet Union, Chungking and other anti-Axis nations receiving supplies of arms and ammunitions from the United States under the Lend-Lease Act would be required to pay in American dollars or "by other means" after the war is over. The phrase "other means" aroused the attention of his hearers. Asked for an explanation, Roosevelt had no hesitation in pointing to the lease of British possessions in the Caribbean Sea for use as American bases in return for the transfer of fifty destroyers to Britain. In this connection, it will be recalled that under the agreement concluded between the United States Secretary of State Cordell Hull and British Ambassador Lord Lothian in September, 1940, the United States secured from Britain eight bases, including those in the Bahamas, Jamaica, Saint Lucia, Trinidad, and Antigua.

By enacting the Lend-Lease Act, the United States meant to become the so-called "arsenal of Democracy." In playing this role, however, America is not carrying on anything like a charity enterprise for the "Democracies." Already, at the time of the enactment of the Act, she made it clear, both in words and by actions, that she meant to realize a profit out of every machine-gun and every tin of canned-goods supplied to the "Democracies."

What profit does she intend to secure? It is nothing less than the consummation of America's inordinate ambition for world domination. If proof of this were required, it is to be readily found in the Anglo-American Economic Agreement of June, 1942, and the United States-Soviet Loan Agreement of November of the same year.

And America's hideous tentacles of aggression are reaching out with amazing rapidity while the war is still in progress. Britain, after ceding eight bases to the United States in exchange for fifty destroyers, has had the practical control of Canada and Australia wrested from her since the outbreak of the War of Greater East Asia. And need it be added that America's ambition knows no end?

Why President Roosevelt has taken up at this particular time the question of post-war payment for American aid to the anti-Axis camp we do not know. In all probability, he was playing the loan-shark who occasionally reminds his debtor of his obligation. The latest utterance by Roosevelt at once gives rise to the question: What will be the "other means" by which the Soviet Union and Chungking will be made to pay after the war? That this is bound to become the most baffling of post-war problems, there can be no doubt.

A Year Ago Today

September 13, 1932

Culminating a two-day session, the second annual East Asia City Conference formally adjourned today in Hsinking after representatives of approximately 70 East Asiatic cities concluded successful discussions. During the session, delegates discussed three chief items, namely, the establishment of cities in the Greater East Asia Co-Prosperity Sphere; special duties and mission of East Asiatic cities and liaison between cities in the Co-Prosperity Sphere.

* * *

The people under the Chungking regime are growing discontented because of the high cost of living and heavy governmental exactions, whereas the higher class of people are leading a gay and easy life. The plight of the farmers is being aggravated by the unnatural concentration of population in the cities and the heavy commodity exactions by the Government. Besides farm taxes, compulsory donations and purchase of bonds are demanded by the Government with the result that many merchants have had to give up their business.

* * *

The Venezuelan Government has opened diplomatic relations with the Chungking regime.

* * *

The British Trade Union Congress which is now meeting at Blackpool, Lancashire, passed an important resolution demanding the cancellation of a clause in the 1926 Labor Law prohibiting large strikes.

REICH TAKES ACTIVE INTEREST IN DEVELOPMENT OF FINE ARTS

Representative German Painters of Today Include Franz Lenk, Georg Schrimpf and Theodor Protzen

By MAX LOEHR
(From The XXth Century)

Munich, the gay capital of Bavaria, has always been an important art center. Its famous Glaspalast (Crystal Palace) contained many an international exhibition of painting and sculpture—until, a few years ago, it fell victim to a devastating fire. But Munich was soon to be compensated for this loss: the German Government decided to present the town with a new, beautifully constructed exhibition hall, and on July 18, 1937, the first exhibition was opened in this "House of German Art."

On the same day, the doors of another exhibition were opened in Munich. This exhibition, entitled "Degenerate Art," had also been assembled by the Government and presented all those manifestations of painting and sculpture that no longer had any place in Germany. Here, perhaps for the first time in history, the State actively took a hand in this sphere of life. This event meant nothing less than that from then on the State exerted a decisive influence in all questions of art.

Let us outline in a few words the type of art that was branded here as degenerate. It included products of the last three decades, especially of the period after the Great War. Of course, the convulsions of the Great War had somehow to find expression. If they had not become apparent at all in art, it would have only proved insincerity or indifference on the part of the artists. Decisive was the manner in which those artists expressed themselves. What is condemned in Germany today is not the compassionate attention paid to social misery, but the one-sided accentuating, even glorification, of all that flourished in misery, in paintings which are poor from the artistic point of view but rich in the invention of ignoble motifs. Condemned is also the tendentious treatment of themes directed against society, State, and the armed forces.

What Is Expressionism?

In the same exhibition certain other manifestations in German expressionism and its branches, which were formerly tolerated or even taken seriously, were now ruthlessly exposed in their unworthiness. Expressionism had completely overthrown the customary ideas of painting of the nineteenth century, and for that reason there were many who did not understand it. The problems which it sought to solve had arisen in European painting subsequent to Cezanne and Van Gogh. They consisted chiefly of the following:

Reduction of perspective depth in favor of surface effects;
Emphasis on line, in contrast to impressionism's alinear, disintegrating manner of painting;
New color combinations with symbolical and decorative meaning;

New subjects, in which can be recognized the desire to place the typical before the individual, the common before the accidental, the timeless before the momentary.

The real content of this strongly mediative art is its urge to grasp what is absolute. Consequently, more and more stress was placed on invisible. The mental image of the world gradually shifted more and more to the thought structure, so that the final result was the loss of all that was concrete: a pure abstraction.

By this we do not mean to say anything against expressionism as such. However, these inclinations toward the abstract have facilitated the growth of a pseudo-artistic production, since all former rules and laws seemed to have lost their validity in expressionism, which encouraged every dilettante to join in. As a result, a lot of worthless stuff was produced which, however, might have appeared to the unschooled and prejudiced eye as no less representative than real art. For the spectator required schooling to be able to judge here.

"If modern painting appeals only to a small, constantly narrowing circle of connoisseurs, this represents a turning away from the general comprehensive subject," wrote Oswal Spengler. The exhibition, "Degenerate Art" was, sociologically speaking, a revolt against this state of affairs. With it an important attempt was made to confirm to the laymen his right to a generally comprehensible subject.

New Trends

There were also strong forces within modern art which revolted against plunging into abstraction, where painting started a desperate race with music, as Wilhelm Pinder put it. A desire for new simplicity, for unadorned trueness to the object, for the resurrection of plastic values began to make itself felt. New roads were entered upon more or less simultaneously in Germany, Italy and France, for which new names were not long in coming: in Germany "Neue Sachlichkeit (New Objectivity): in Italy "Valori Plastici (Plastic Values); and later Novencento Italiano" (Twentieth Century Italian Art); and in France "Realisme magique et Surrealisme."

All these trends, however, still contain some of that which they really set out to do away with, namely, an inclination for representing something unfathomable or even uncanny, something mechanistic or primitive. In almost every painting of this kind there is something unreal that gives the spectator a feeling of dread or discomfort. It is to this fact that the Italian expression "pitturametafisica," metaphysical painting, refers.

In Italy the exponents of this trend, which is no longer regarded as representative, are allowed free rein and are even permitted to exhibit their works at the Quadriennale, the State exhibition in Rome, the more so as their influence is steadily decreasing. In Germany, however, this development is being, so to speak, accelerated by State intervention. This intervention consists in a selection being made. The decisive factor in this selection is the artistic level of the work. But the painting is judged also as to whether it is worthy of enduring as a document of present-day Germany. Thus the ever difficult question of judging and selecting paintings has now been placed on the same plane as that on which the basic standards of political life are valid. There can be no doubt that the renewal and clarification of values arising from the political sphere are not enough to produce new talents, but that a new balance between will and feeling on the one hand, and an appropriate formal expression on the other, has in most cases still to be found. Nevertheless, the beginnings are there, and in some cases even more.

Let us look at a few samples of what has appeared in the way of new painting during the last few years.

Exponent of New Objectivity

First we have a work by Franz Lenk, Watering Can and Garbage Bucket, painted in 1927. This painting is a good example of what the exponents of new objectivity wished to express. It is not a very impressive motif: a packing case, a tin bucket, and watering can, a fence with a barbed wire and, in the background, a ship. All in all a very ordinary, common combination which one might find any day in a corner of any back garden on the lower Elbe. From the purely formal aspect we notice the employment of simple geometrical shapes as a drastic means of order, and the stressing of verticals and horizontal parallel to the frame, varied by delicate displacements of the axes of the objects in the foreground. This gives their relative position a certain appearance of severity, of not being accidental . . .

The reason for the poverty and simplicity of the motif is to be found in the desire for form expressed by the composition. But are there not more pleasant, more meaningful objects? Why this almost offensive combination of lowly commonplaceness? It cannot be entirely explained. But there is at least one deep-seated reason for it: such things do exist. The painter takes the trouble to analyze them. He penetrates into a sphere hitherto without aesthetic attractions and is perhaps able to discover something worthy of being painted. Thus, it gains a new, reconciling aspect. Something has been opened up which existed only as a thing without artistic value.

Landscapes

Now we have a painting by Georg Schrimpf: Landscape with Cows. Schrimpf, who died several years ago, belonged to the leading post-expressionists in Germany. This picture of his shows the most simple structure, with broad expanses, carefully drawn horizontals and smooth, firmly modeled outlines. The scene looks as if it has been tidied up. In that respect it is related to the landscapes of the Classicist period of the early nineteenth century. The painting is filled with a profound tranquillity, entirely without pathos. However, it is not prosaic but rather breathes a mood of gentle sadness. . . .

Among the subjects of painting are the realities of public life. An unexpected artistic yield is presented by works dealing with theme of the giant road construction in Germany. One example is Theodor Protzen's "Speedway Bridge in Wurttemberg." It shows a construction site on the banks of a river in winter. The wooden scaffolding of the unfinished arches spans the valley in a mighty rhythm. In spite of the many carefully executed details, the formal emphasis is on the order created by the constructive coherence. The dreamlike tranquillity which the painting contains as a result of this order relates it to the much more idyllic subjects of Schrimpf's "Landscape with Cows." In spite of the technical theme, the painting of the bridge is not unromantic. Here engineering does not violate or destroy Nature but unites with it organically, as if the valley wanted the bridge.

That which is common to almost all paintings of recent years is their formal simplicity and precision the distinct apprehension of the subject matter. The clarity which most of the present-day painters demand from their work is an ideal that has by no means always existed. In the picturesque painting of Rembrandt and the Impressionists there is often no actual drawing to be seen; their clarity is provided solely by the elements of color and light and is therefore a very limited one. Today line and clear modeling are again strongly emphasized. And this means nothing less than a resurrection of the plastic spirit.

Britain's Road to Ruin

By TADAO MATSUMOTO
(From the Kuzureyuku Eteikoku Nijunen-shi)

Part IV

Foreign Concessions in China formed, so to speak, an "Empire within the Empire" over which China had no administrative powers. Britain was the first to set up a foreign concession in China. Her first concession was established at Shanghai in 1845 after the conclusion of the Nanking Treaty. Since then, she obtained concessions in Tientsin, Hankow, Canton, Amoy, Chinkiang, Kiukiang, Wenchow and Ningpo. She thus had nine concessions in all or more than any other single foreign country possessed.

As her concessions in all places were established earlier than those of other countries, they were more favorably located and all prospered. Moreover, she put forth constant efforts to extend the powers over her concessions. At the time of the inauguration of the British concession in Shanghai, the Chinese Government had jurisdiction over Chinese inhabitants of the concession, but, when a revolt caused the temporary paralysis of the functioning of Chinese organs in the city in 1853, Britain took advantage of the situation to initiate a new arrangement according to which the British and American consuls took over jurisdiction not only over cases in which foreign and Chinese residents of the concession were implicated but even over civil and criminal cases between Chinese nationals.

Usurp Powers

Later, it was arranged, with the acquiescence of the Chinese authorities, that the concession authorities should have jurisdiction over nationals of non-treaty countries. Subsequently, the establishment of Chinese law courts within the concession was recognized, and it was so arranged that foreign judges should be sent to such courts to watch the trials of criminal cases in which aliens were involved. Nominally these foreign judges were not allowed to take part in the judgment of cases. Nor were they entitled to participate in the trial of cases between Chinese nationals or that of civil cases. But, as a matter of fact, their powers were gradually so extended as to equal or even surpass those of Chinese judges. They came to take part not only in the trial of civil and criminal cases in which foreigners were plaintiffs and Chinese defendants but in all cases in which Chinese inhabitants of concessions were litigants. On the occasion of the revolution at the close of the Manchu dynasty, these courts were taken over by the concession authorities, who even took it upon themselves to nominate Chinese judges. Such was the way in which Britain treated China in all matters.

Communications

The position held by Britain in the field of communications in China was superior to that of any other country. It was with the British funds that the railways mentioned below were built. To give railway loans in China does not simply mean the accommodation of the requisite funds. It also means the acquisition of control over the railways concerned, of the right of interference in the railway finance or of preferential rights in regard to the sale of railway materials and the construction of branch lines.

	Tl. length incl. of br. lines (klm.)
1. Loans undertaken by Britain singly:
A. The lines already completed—
Peiping-Shanhaikwan Railway	465
Taokow-Chinghwa Railway	165
Nanking-Shanghai Railway	48
Shanghai-Hangchow-Ningpo R.	282
Nanking-Pingsiang Railway	175
Canton-Kowloon Railway	179
Tientsin-Pikow Railway	1.105
B. The lines not yet completed—
Icheng-Kweiki Railway	480
Pukow-Sinyang Railway	400
Canton-Meihsien Railway	350
2 Loans undertaken conjointly with other countries:
Peiping-Hankow Railway	1.321
Hankow-Canton Railway	1.185

Britain also held a very important position in the shipping business. Foreign ships are entitled to inland navigation in China, and this privilege is traceable to the agreement which Britain exacted from China in 1898. The very important part which British shipping used to play can be inferred from the figures in the following table giving the tonnage of British ships visiting Chinese ports:—

	Number of ships	Total tonnage (In 1,000 tons)	Pct. to the total (Pct.)
1930	49,402	57.247	36.79
1931	50.534	60.561	37.85
1932	49.517	59.431	34.86
1933	47.575	58.215	42.4
1934	43.738	58.867	41.9
1935	43.477	60.112	41.8
1936	43,154	57.345	39.5
1937	35.323	36.106	—

Investments

The British population in China was large—larger than that of any other foreign nationals except the Japanese and Russians. In 1926, it stood at 23,941 and in 1936 at 31,305. It is to their quality rather than to their number, however, that importance should be attached in regard to British residents in China. In all important and profitable enterprises, including the mining, trade and banking businesses, British nationals were closely concerned.

The Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation (capitalized at $50,000,000) had its branches in many places in China as was natural in an organ established for the specific purpose of helping Britain's activities in that country. Not only did it wield dominant influence in financial circles but it reigned supreme in the sphere of giving loans and making investments. There were many other British banks doing active business.

The collieries at Kaiping, Mentowkow and Chiaotsuo in which Britain had special interest are all important coal mines in China. The Anglo-American Tobacco Company was noteworthy as a big British enterprise. In Shanghai, British interests were operating various enterprises, spinning, gas, water-supply, tramcar, shipbuilding and warehousing.

Process of Decline

In recent years, Britain had gradually fallen from the superior position which she had enjoyed for many years in all spheres of activity in China, various causes may be assigned for this decline in British influence, but the most important was Japan's vigorous advance. As I have already noted, the expansion of Japan's trade with China led to the fall of Britain's China trade from its proud position of predominance. Due to Japan's protest or opposition, it may further be noted, the contract for the construction of a Fakumen railway which a British firm signed with the Chinese Government in November, 1907, and the plans for the building of a Chin-Chi and a Chin-Ai railways, projected by the Anglo-Chinese Syndicate, jointly with American capitalists, fell through.

It must have greatly vexed Britain, who used to have her own way in everything in China, to find herself forced by Japan to give up the rights and interests which she had gained, but, favored by natural conditions and helped by her victory in the Russo-Japanese War, Japan's position in China was bound to advance. As Japan's position rose, Britain's position had to decline proportionately.

At the opening of the negotiations between Japan and Britain in 1914 regarding the South China railway, the British Government attempted to turn down Japan's demand peremptorily by declaring that Japan's interests in the Yangtze Valley were incomparably smaller than British interests.

Comparison Made

This British assertion was refuted by the late Count Kato, then Japanese Foreign Minister, who, with the aid of statistical figures showed the British Government that in many respects Japanese interests were more remarkable than British.

In the table of comparisons presented to the British Government, the following facts were noted:—

1. While British residents totalled 4,306 (of which 41 represented missionaries) Japanese residents totalled 9,523.

2. Concerning trade, although in the import trade of Shanghai, Japan's figure was only about one half of Britain's, it equalled Britain's in respect to the export trade.

3. In regard to the tonnage of shipping calling at Yangtze ports, Japanese tonnage in the port of Shanghai was three-fifths of British tonnage, while in the port of Hankow it was over three-fifths. Whereas the tonnage of Japanese shipping entering the port of Shanghai advanced from 14 per cent of the total foreign shipping to 22 per cent during the ten preceding years, that of British shipping declined from 48 per cent to 40 per cent during the same interval. At Hankow, British shipping showed an advance from 43 per cent to 49 per cent, but Japan's advance was from 17 to 30 per cent.

4. The Nisshin Kisen Kaisha, the main Japanese shipping company engaged in the navigation of the Yangtze, was operating five lines with twelve ships with an aggregate tonnage of 25,000 tons, while the Butterfield and Swire and Messrs. Jardine, Matheson, of Britain, had five lines operated by 17 ships with a total tonnage of 25,000 tons.

5. Regarding railway and other interests, Britain held an unquestionably far superior position, but such interests which Japan had already acquired were not negligible. (Mention was made of the railway concessions already obtained by Japan, the Hanyehping loan, etc.)

6. Japan had eight consulates against Britain's eleven.

Hajime Suzuki

(From the Nippon Sangyo Keizai)

The character of Hajime Suzuki, head of the Metals Industry Control Association, may be summed up in the words mediocre but brilliant. Consistant and steady plugging for almost forty straight years with the Furukawa Electric Company has gained for Mr. Suzuki an unassailable reputation for dependability that has withstood the most exacting test of time.

When compared with the spectacular rise of some of the other industrial leaders, the career of Hajime Suzuki appears indeed dull and uninteresting. But the time he has spent with the Furukawa Company has not been wasted. It is largely due to his efforts that the company rose from an ordinary commercial company to one of the largest manufacturers of electrical equipment in Japan and whose activities reach out to the continent and all parts of the Greater East Asia Sphere. His dependability has had a steadying influence throughout the vicissitudes of his company in an unstable economic world.

Heavy-set and thick jowled, Mr. Suzuki represents the typical plodder. Steady and sure rather than fancy dexterity typifies his actions. Laying no claim to having mastered the more refined social accomplishments, he frankly disclosed his ineptitude as a composer of Japanese poetry, having taken it up upon the insistence of his friend Reinosuke Suga, present head of the Teikoku Mining Company. Smiling wryly, he said, "When my friends heard that I was studying poetry, they all took it up saying, 'If Suzuki can do it, I can.'"

During his school days, however, Mr. Suzuki was an active member of the rowing team. Even then he was known for his patience. When one of his schoolmates twitted him about it, he laconically replied, "Yes, that's one of my faults." But there are those who know that this "fault" of Mr. Suzuki is acting like a steadying anchor for the Control Association and will stand in good stead during the days ahead.

Asked for his opinion of the character of one of his closest associates, Tadayoshi Obata, Mr. Suzuki unwittingly gave an exact description of himself. Said he, "He has ability and genius, but cares not to display it. He is steady and reliable. He avoids open argument but somehow manages to make other people conform to his most detailed plans."

An instance of his farsighted leadership was brought to light during the hectic days of the Manchurian Incident when the companies of Japan were making a rush to the continent and fiercely competing with each other for priority. Pushing forward his contention with characteristic stubbornness that only eight of the most dependable companies in Japan should be allowed to contribute in the expansion of Manchoukuo, Mr. Suzuki prevented what would then have been a mere hodgepodge of cut-throat competitors fiercely fighting each other for a well-regulated, orderly development of the country. He eventually became head of the Manchuria Electric Line Company capitalized then at ¥5,000,000, and under his management, the company grew until its capital increased four-fold to ¥20,000,000.

Today, as head of the Metals Industry Control Association, with some 30 different companies under its roof, the most difficult problem, as admitted by Mr. Suzuki himself, is the maintenance of harmony among the working units. In this, he has been singularly successful as he remarks, "If anyone has any complaints to make, I want him to bring them directly to me. No one will get any place by keeping his troubles to himself. It is only after we have gotton things off our chests that real harmony can be attained."
